My husband and I rely on the U.S. Postal Service for delivery of mail, packages, checks, medicines, etc. We oppose the new proposed changes to postal services, because these changes would further erode the quality and efficiency of postal delivery. Closing down more post offices, changing various services, increasing rates, getting rid of sorting machines, and laying off more postal workers does nothing to improve postal service, rather it leads to a further deterioration and the slowing-down of mail delivery.

Postal service has been on a sharp decline, since the existing Post Master General implemented his postal changes last year. Delivery service for mail, packages, checks and medicines has been severely crippled and slowed down, due to these changes. Rural areas, seniors, vets, and other Americans depend on the U.S. Postal Service for the arrival of their social security and disability checks, packages, mail, and prescription medicines. These individuals are already hurting from the continuous slowdown of postal services, due to the last round of negative postal changes. Now, our Post Master General wants to further destroy the efficiency and effectiveness of the U.S. Postal Service with another round of proposed negative changes. If implemented, these new changes would further hurt the American people and continue the downward spiral and deterioration of the U.S. Postal Service. These changes could bring the U.S. Postal System to the brink of irreputable harm from which our nation's postal system may never recover.

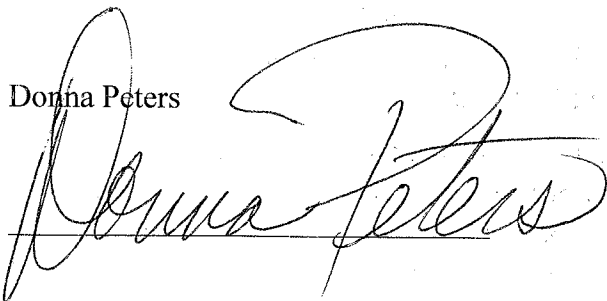

We ask that the Postal Regulatory Commission thoroughly examine and carefully study these changes and seriously analyze their potential consequences. If negative, please reject any of the changes that would further hurt postal service and fail to restore the viability, effectiveness, and efficiency of the U.S. Postal System. There has to be a better way to improve our postal service and restore the U.S. Postal System to its rightful place as an important quasi-government agency. The American people rely heavily on the U.S. Postal Service for many important aspects of their daily lives. We ask that this commission value the U.S. Postal Service and make positive changes that would rebuild the viability and efficiency of the postal system without further destroying this institution.

Sincerely,

Donna and Jerry Peters
